Yandex, Google and FAS Reach Settlement on Android in Russia

Moscow, April 17, 2017. Today the Federal Antimonopoly Service of Russia (FAS) announced the approval of a settlement of the two-year old Android antitrust case in Russia.

"Today is an important day for Russian consumers as Google has agreed to take significant steps that open up its Android platform in Russia," said Arkady Volozh, Chief Executive Officer of Yandex. "Now millions of Russian Android users will be offered a choice of search engines on their mobile devices. I am thankful to the Federal Antimonopoly Service for applying the law in a manner that effectively and efficiently restores competition to the market for the benefit of Russian users, as competition always breeds innovation. I'm excited, together with the entire team at Yandex, to continue building products and services that deliver exceptional customer experiences."
